Relationship between body condition and corticosterone secretion in free-living arctic ground squirrels. Large increases in circulating glucocorticoid levels may be expected to occur when an organism enters an environment with lower temperatures. If this increase is mediated by the hypothalamo-pituitary-adrenal axis, the rate of increase should be lower in animals with a high metabolic rate and hence a larger pool of circulating substrate. In this study we examined the effects of body condition, assessed as the percentage body fat, on the adrenocorticotropic hormone (ACTH) and corticosterone response to a simulated arctic winter in ground squirrels (Citellus citellus). Although plasma ACTH and corticosterone levels were significantly elevated after transfer to the cold, these increases were not affected by any of the indices of body condition. This lack of consistent correlation between body condition and the plasma ACTH and corticosterone response suggest that this axis is not involved in the observed increase in corticosterone secretion. We, therefore, hypothesize that the increase in corticosterone secretion seen after transfer to the cold in ground squirrels is due to other factors.Q: executing javascript from command line in linux I want to execute some javascript code in linux. I was hoping to use some combination of ruby, cmd, and a lot of shell. Is there some command I could pass a javascript file and get a list of the javascript objects / functions, or to get information about the javascript code itself? Thank you A: The problem with a long process is that it gets complicated. The best I know is to do it in three steps: In ruby, parse the javascript into a string. This will give you a list of "objects" and a list of "functions". Run the javascript from the command line in the console. The command line interpreter will use a limited subset of ECMAScript to interpret your javascript. But this subset is enough to run your javascript. From the console, run javascript2ruby to get a ruby like description of your javascript. This will list your "objects" and "functions". Description: Smooth and silky skin on a smooth body. This tantalizing view from behind will leave you breathless. We can't forget this man. Like everything else on this site, he is completely exclusive. They are all exclusive, but he's our
