It is based on a story by Sir Samuel Garth, the author of The Provoked Wife. As the story is set in the 1500s, the opera was first performed at the Calgary Opera in 2001. Weir was drawn to the opera by its emphasis on sexuality, which she says appealed to her in a way that the music of her own operas did not. In the words of the composer, "I was intrigued by the fact that sexuality was so complex in the old Tudor period. In my own opera, I always felt that sexuality was either too complicated or not complicated enough." The opera consists of two acts, each of which takes place in a different location and has a different cast of characters. The first act, set in Salisbury Cathedral, is about a beautiful young woman named Judith and her relationships with three men: her suitor Sir Gawain; her cousin Bathilde; and her former suitor and the man she really loves, Sir Bertram. The second act, set in a house, is about the tormented emotions of Judith's housekeeper, Ursula, who is secretly in love with Judith. Recordings The opera was recorded by the Calgary Opera Orchestra, conducted by John Ben-Tish in 2001, and released on compact disc.
