The present invention relates to a magnetic recording and/or reproducing apparatus using a helical scan method or a rotary scan method as a scanning means. In a magnetic recording and/or reproducing apparatus, in order to improve the recording density, the gap between a head and a magnetic recording medium is kept small, and in order to ensure the stable linear velocity of a head, the head is pressed against the magnetic recording medium by a capstan of a tape travelling device. The pressing force of the capstan is generally regulated by a tape travelling force regulator. In the conventional art, the travelling force regulator is operated by detecting an amount of tape that is wound around a capstan by an amount of tape that is wound around a tape travelling motor, and then a travelling distance of the tape is controlled on the basis of the tape winding amount and the travelling distance of the tape. In order to improve the speed of a recording and reproducing process, a magnetic recording and/or reproducing apparatus is proposed in Japanese Laid Open Patent Application No. SHO 64-77655, which has a microcomputer for detecting and observing a travelling distance of a tape to perform a tape travelling operation, and which is capable of detecting an amount of tape wound around a tape travelling motor even during the tape travelling operation by adjusting the tape travelling force. In the above proposed apparatus, however, although the amount of tape wound around a tape travelling motor can be detected, it is not possible to detect an amount of tape wound around a capstan. Therefore, in the conventional apparatus, it is impossible to take an optimum tape travelling force due to a difference between a winding load of a capstan in a tape travelling condition and the winding load of a tape travelling motor during tape travelling. In the above-mentioned conventional apparatus, even when the tape winding load of the tape travelling motor is determined on the basis of the amount of tape wound around the tape travelling motor, the winding load of the tape travelling motor fluctuates due to the external factors such as the shape of the tape travelling motor and the amount of tape pulled out, and the amplitude of fluctuation is not always kept constant, so that the tape travelling force cannot be optimum. Therefore, it is impossible to obtain a constant travelling velocity of a tape.

Regulation of iron metabolism and signaling in HIV-induced pathogenesis: implications in therapy and prevention. Iron metabolism plays a critical role in the pathogenesis of the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) disease. Iron, acting as an essential constituent of essential enzymes and regulatory proteins, is necessary for viral replication. Defective iron metabolism leads to a vicious cycle with increased iron supply, viral replication and subsequent increased iron levels, which enhances cellular replication and the destruction of the immune system in infected individuals. Iron chelation therapy has been used to target the interaction of iron and HIV, and shows promise in the treatment of HIV infection. This review highlights the role of iron metabolism and its regulation in HIV-induced disease and the potential for iron chelation therapy for HIV-induced pathogenesis.

Hetero-oligodendrocytes provide the neuregulin receptors in the oligodendrocyte lineage. Efficient transduction of oligodendrocytes requires the presence of hetero-oligodendrocytes (HOs). We have investigated the hetero-oligodendrocyte derivation from the neuroectoderm of C57BL/6 mice and compared it with the generation of Olig2-positive cells in neural crest-derived cultures. We report here that most HOs are derived from the neuroectoderm by a process that depends on basic fibroblast growth factor (bFGF) and is independent of Olig2. Using bFGF signaling inhibitor SU5402, we found that the self-renewing potential of neuroectoderm-derived cells required endogenous autocrine bFGF. In contrast, neural crest-derived cells do not survive on the inhibitor, suggesting that non-self-renewing progenitors (or fate-restricted progenitors) are required to generate HO cells. Furthermore, the comparison of neuroectoderm-derived cells and Olig2-positive neural crest-derived cells revealed a striking difference: the appearance of HO progenitors after the elimination of Olig2-positive cells in the neural tube. Our data indicate that HO generation in the oligodendrocyte lineage depends on the generation of a lineage-restricted progenitor that can be expanded by growth factors.
